

Today has been a day of reflection for me. For many, the coming of a new year is time for rejoicing and for reflecting upon what has passed and what awaits us for the year ahead. In many ways, January 1 is quite an arbitrary day in that it♦s merely the start of the calendar - but not necessarily a significant milestone in anyone♦s world. The day that you arrived in the world - now that day has significance. It is with this in mind that I reflect upon another year - and look ahead to what lies in front of me. It is on this day that I find myself looking at the big picture of life, looking into the mirror for meaning, diving into my soul for tranquility and understanding - and peace. Today will always be known as Stevie♦s Day to me. Perhaps that requires a little explanation. On a day like today, I give thanks for many reasons. I give thanks for my health, for my friends and family, for those people close to me, and for the path that I have found myself upon after all these years. I give thanks for having insight into the ways of the world. I am thankful for having gone down a path that lead me to Austin, Texas - perhaps the best decision I♦ve ever made, the best fork in the road upon which I♦ve ever arrived. I am thankful for that fateful day - in 1983 - when I first saw Stevie Ray Vaughan live on the hallowed stage of the National Arts Center in Ottawa. Little did I know then that that moment, frozen in time, would lead to me what would become my promised land. I found myself exploring Austin - first by music, then by presence. There was something about this place that was just so ♦right♦ for my heart and my soul. In August of 1990 I packed up my things and moved to Austin. I had a guitar, some clothes, a book of photos, and not much more - a modern day Huckleberry Finn if you will. On this day back in 1990, I awoke to my first birthday in Austin. I also awoke to the news - of Stevie Ray Vaughan♦s passing. And with those two events inextricably intertwined in my life, I have come to look upon August 27 as Stevie♦s Day. Over the past 16 years, I have played his music on this day. Since the statue of him was erected in the early 90s, I have spent time reflecting there annually. If not for one year (when I found myself at a conference in the Netherlands on the all-important day), I would have a perfect record. ♦Texas Flood♦ sounds much more appropriate in Austin than it did in Maastricht - but the sentiment was there nonetheless. Over the past 16 years, I have given thanks - for the music, for the person, for the impact that something so simple would have on my world. As luck would have it, I find myself within a stone♦s throw of his statue at least once a week - a subtle reminder of the need to remember - and be thankful - and to reflect - and to live in tranquility. ♦Tick tock tick tock tick tock people - time♦s ticking away♦ ♦  Thanks Stevie - you♦ll always be revered - and deeply missed. I didn♦t know you - but you welcomed me to your world, which then became my home. My deepest thanks to you - on this, Stevie♦s Day.
